About The School of Music
The UA School of Music is one of the most widely recognized and comprehensive music schools in the Southeast and includes the only university-based symphony in Alabama. The School of Music has 40 full-time and more than 20 part-time faculty members who are regularly in demand as performers and clinicians internationally. The School has more than 400 majors enrolled in both undergraduate and graduate programs focused on performance, music education, composition, theory, history, music therapy, jazz studies, and more. It seeks to prepare students for professional careers in a wide variety of musical pursuits incorporating all genres of performance and education.

First accredited by The National Association of Schools of Music in 1945, the School of Music is known as an artistic community with both strong academic and creative traditions as well as a respected source of musical innovations. It is the destination of choice for aspiring young musicians as well as a magnet for community and statewide musical education, workshops, youth training camps, and competitions.

The School of Music occupies the splendid Frank Moody Music Building. Since it opened in 1987, the Moody Music Building has become one of our state’s most important cultural facilities. Numerous alumni of the School of Music are employed by professional symphony orchestras, opera companies, colleges and universities, noted public school systems, and arts organizations nationwide. Their diverse backgrounds have landed them in noted groups from the Cleveland Orchestra to the popular group Take 6.
